Wing family members fly high with Alabama National Guard

Dozens of military family members here recently got the unique opportunity to fly on a KC-135R and witness mid-air refueling courtesy of the 117th Air Refueling Wing of the Alabama Air National Guard.

The 117th Air Refueling Wing from the Alabama Air National Guard will be here until Saturday performing refueling missions and to support the 52nd Fighter Wing during their Operational Readiness Inspection. The 117th ARW arrived July 15 with two planes and about 75 members who have provided extra manpower in logistics, operations, supply, maintenance, civil engineer, medical, transportation and financial management offices on base.

Col. Kirk Tyree, 117th ARW Commander, offered the incentive flights to Col. Greg Ihde, 52nd FW commander. Ihde then contacted his squadron commanders and gave them the opportunity to nominate unit members and their family members for the incentive rides. Because of time constraints due to last week's exercise, many military members weren't able to participate in the incentive rides, but several family members, including Bree Krosschell, sister of 22nd Fighter Squadron F-16 pilot Capt. Chris Krosschell, took the opportunity to see how aerial refueling is done.

"I felt like a kid in a candy store!" Krosschell said to Capt. Mike Warren, 117th ARW co-pilot, when he asked if she enjoyed the flight. "The ride was pretty sweet and I could not believe it was real – the plane was so close."

The incentive ride included a tour of the aircraft and the opportunity to sit in the cockpit while taking off and later during landing. While aerial refueling took place, participants rotated in and out of the boom pod to see how the aircraft met up with the refueler and how fuel is transferred.

Aircrew members said they enjoyed answering questions about the aircraft, their jobs and the military.

Krosschell said watching aerial refueling is an opportunity she'll never forget. She suggests those who get the chance to do the same should bring a warm jacket because it gets chilly in the boom pod and plenty of film to record the memorable experience.

AFN gains exclusive news and sports channels

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany – Some AFN Europe television viewers, including those in the Eifel region, will see extra channels appear on their TV menus in the near future as the American Forces Television and Radio Service (AFRTS) broadcast center reorganizes its channel distribution.

The current NewSport channel will split into two separate channels, one all-news and the other all -sports, known as "AFN News" and "AFN Sports." AFN will add this service to the television lineup at 1 a.m. Central European Time Tuesday August 7.

"News junkies will be watching a lot more AFN Television," AFN Europe Public Affairs Officer Roger Williams adds. The newly created AFN News channel will offer continuous stateside news, international news and analysis from CBS, NBC, ABC, CNN, PBS, MSNBC, Fox News and other news sources. Viewers will also see a variety of new information and analysis programs not currently offered.

The staff at the AFRTS Broadcast Center at March Air Reserve Base, California has spent months negotiating with the networks and show producers for program rights.

"AFN News will begin offering many new programs we've not been able to fit into the NewSport schedule," adds Williams. Fox News Live, Hard Ball with Chris Matthews, Hannity and Colmes, Burden of Proof, CNN International News, MSNBC Investigates, Greenfield At Large, Your World with Neil Cavuto, The Edge With Paula Zahn, CNN dot Com and other new shows will air at various times on weekdays and weekends. These new

Accidents

By Susanne Esch
52nd Security Forces Squadron

There were 22 minor and two major accidents involving Americans in the Eifel region last week.

One of the minor accidents occurred in Bitburg. Investigation revealed the emergency brake on a Jeep failed and the Jeep rolled back and struck a German's car. German Polizei arrived on scene and cited the Jeep driver 20 DM for faulty equipment. The estimated cost to repair the damage was $45.00.

Thursday afternoon, an American driver was involved in a major accident on B-50, approx 30 minutes from Bernkastel. The driver approached a stop sign at a four-way intersection, applied the brakes, and they failed to engage. The vehicle, a 1990 Opel, crossed over a median into the left lane, collided with a German National's vehicle, and came to rest in a nearby field. The Opel sustained disabling damage to the entire vehicle, with estimated repair costs of $1800.

Those two accidents are good examples to make sure you keep your car in good working order by conducting periodic maintenance and driver inspections. Use a proactive approach in conducting safety checks.

Eleven of the minor accidents resulted from driver inattention and failing to maintain awareness in parking lots. One related problem involves drivers who are still using cell phones while operating their vehicle.

On April 1, the traffic law in Germany changed to help police reduce this hazardous practice. Current German law states the vehicle operators may no longer use mobile or cellular phones while driving if they have to pick up or hold a receiver or the telephone itself. Violators are subject to a 60 DM fine. Hands-off devices or headsets are authorized under the same provisions and if hearing is not reduced; therefore, phone systems with only one earphone are authorized.

programs will join the lineup that already includes healthy doses of CNN Headline News, 48 Hours, Good Morning America, CBS Sunday Morning and the others on the current NewSport channel.

Sports fans will get more variety in stateside and international sports events without interruptions.

"If you want the latest scores, highlights or breaking sports news, AFN Sports will be your uninterrupted connection," adds Williams. AFN Sports will also feature more military service academy events, expanded sports analysis programs and expanded coverage of some of the not-so-mainstream sports events, including AMA Motocross, ISKA Kickboxing, WNBA, Tennis Masters Series, Track and Field, Boxing, IROC and IRL Racing.

Customers who only receive the one broadcast channel will continue to see the major sporting events on the AFN Europe channel. Viewers using the AFRTS satellite decoder, and most base housing residents, will have access to the new channels.

Lieutenant Colonel Michael Edrington, AFN Europe Commander is excited about the added channels, saying "this has been on the drawing board for a long time and now customers will have one dedicated news channel and one channel dedicated to sports. Customers have wanted it and now we're ready to give it to them. These new channels help us bring more of America to the audience."

The switchover begins at 1 a.m. in Europe August 7. AFN technicians will make the adjustments for the added services and that transition could take two hours to complete. AFN technicians are on duty around the clock to receive any television outage reports. The trouble desk serving Europe is DSN 329-4444 or Germany commercial at 06915-688444.

The new AFN channels look like this: Channel #1-AFN Sports (currently NewSport), Channel #2- AFN Europe/Atlantic, Channel #3-Spectrum, Channel #4-AFN Pacific, Channel #5-AFN News, Channel #6-AFN Korea and Channel #7 (currently the Program Guide channel) moves to Channel #7. Channel designations may vary for Power Vu and TKS cable customers.

The launch of the new channels is a massive worldwide technological undertaking and some cable customers will notice that the Program Guide channel will be absent for a three to four month period. Channel surfers will also notice that the Electronic Program Guide will be discontinued on August 7 to free up some digital bandwidth for the additional services.

Expansion of AFN services doesn't end there. In 2002, AFN will also split the current Spectrum channel offering more variety. (USAFE News Service)

Star Card interest rate drops

For the sixth time this year, Military Star cardholders benefit from yet another drop in the card's interest rate.

With the latest announcement by the Federal Reserve, key interest rates were lowered by a quarter percent. As a result, the Military Star card is reducing its interest rate from 11.75 percent to 11.50 percent, effective Wednesday.

The interest rate on the Military star card has dropped nearly 3 percent since January and is at its lowest point since the card was introduced in September 2000.

The new rate doesn't apply to Military Clothing Plans, special promotions already in existence, or other special programs that may offer reduced rates such as reduced interest for Joint Chiefs of Staff-directed orders.

The Military Star card is accepted at all AAFES, NEXCOM, MCX and Coast Guard exchanges, including catalog and military clothing stores operated by AAFES and Marine Corps exchanges. (AAFES Public Affairs Office)

Spangdahlem Air Base's gas station starts a 90-day expanded hours test, beginning Wednesday. The facility will operate 6 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday, according to Stan McGhee, AAFES manager. Depending upon use, McGhee may extend the hours even further.

In addition, he said eventually AAFES stations in the Eifel would be equipped with "swipe" cards to replace gas coupons. When this happens, McGhee said gas would be available 24 hours a day. No date has been firmly established yet for the installation of swipe cards.

Anonymous call leads to fugitive's arrest

Communications member accused of equipment theft nabbed using Internet tip

By Maj. Mike Richmond
Office of Special Investigations Public Affairs Office

A senior airman who spent a year and a half in fugitive status is behind bars in Luxembourg today after being arrested Monday by the Luxembourg National Police.

The arrest of Senior Airman Douglas Saferite Jr. follows 17 months of coordination and cooperation between Det. 518 of the Air Force Office of Special Investigations, the Luxembourg police and the U.S. State Department.

Saferite disappeared from Spangdahlem Air Base, Germany, March 2, 2000, while awaiting a court-martial to face charges of stealing more than $110,000 of computer equipment from the 52nd Communications Squadron. He was later court-martialed in absentia and sentenced to six years confinement, a dishonorable discharge, reduction to E-1, and a fine of $14,565.

OSI Special Agent Lynn Stedge ran the case against Saferite from its inception, when a computer technician probing network anomalies on Spangdahlem AB in September 1999 discovered several necessary computer components were missing. Stedge's subsequent investigation indicated Saferite had stolen computer processors, two laptops, and other network components, then sold many of the goods over the Internet.

Following Saferite's disappearance, Stedge led the manhunt and coordination efforts that ultimately brought the fugitive back into custody.

"I'm very happy about this," Stedge said. "It finally puts closure on this case. It's been a long couple of years."

Saferite was arrested at the home of his Luxembourg wife and child in the city of Garnich after surveillance a few days earlier confirmed his presence there. Stedge said he had suspected for more than a year that Saferite was hiding in the home, based on several clues unearthed in the investigation. But without more evidence than they had, Luxembourg laws prevented police from executing a search warrant.

"It was frustrating because he was just across the border, no more than an hour away, and yet we couldn't move on him because there's no (Status of Forces Agreement) between us and Luxembourg," Stedge said. "Even though he'd already been tried and convicted, we needed just a little bit more evidence to make it happen."

The evidence they needed dropped into their laps July 16 in the form of an anonymous phone call to the OSI Operations Center at Andrews AFB, Md. According to Stedge, the caller reported information about a series of Internet chat-room conversations he'd had with one of Saferite's relatives, who indicated Saferite was, indeed, residing in Garnich.

"That was enough to provide the final impetus for the Luxembourg police to run the surveillance operation,"

Stedge said, "and once they saw him they were able to make arrangements to go in and get him."

Stedge said he found it ironic that an Internet-related tip ultimately ended Saferite's life on the lam.

"He got caught stealing computers, and then computers ended up being his demise," Stedge said.

Luxembourg laws forbade OSI agents from participating in the arrest, so an international arrest warrant was obtained for the Luxembourg police through the U.S. State Department.

According to Det. 518's commander, Special Agent Todd Langenfeld, the Luxembourg police called him immediately following the arrest to report it had gone smoothly but that Saferite was "very emotional" when he realized he wasn't beyond the reach of the law.

"He was completely surprised," Langenfeld said. "He thought he was a free man and that we didn't have jurisdiction to come get him. But he was wrong."

Langenfeld praised the Luxembourg police for the operational security they maintained throughout the case.

"This took a lot of patience and a lot of persistence on everyone's part," Langenfeld said. "And when it finally came time to do the surveillance and make the actual arrest, they did an outstanding job. Any leaks or screw-ups at that point might have caused this guy to run again, which would have wiped out almost two years of work."

"Command officials here are pretty ecstatic about this," Langenfeld said. "It's been a long time coming, and we're all real happy that justice has been done."

DODDS takes steps to prevent violence

New initiatives focus on early detection, intervention, employing community involvement

By Vanessa Molina
USAFE News Service

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, Germany — The wake of school shootings in the United States during the past two years has prompted officials at the Department of Defense Dependent Schools to develop a new program aimed at preventing school violence.

The launch of the Safe Schools Program for the 2001-2002 school year is one of several initiatives DODDS officials are employing to create a safer environment for students.

Schools across the nation have heightened security and refined violence awareness programs since the April 20, 1999, tragedy at Columbine High School, Colo. Two teens went on a shooting spree – killing 13 students and a teacher, and wounding 30 others in less than one hour during the incident.

With the Safe Schools Program, DODDS hopes to prevent events like Columbine from happening again. The program relies on participation from military leaders, school officials, parents and students to identify problems that may threaten school safety and security.

“Our main focus is on intervention strategies, such as early detection of troubled students and staff, and removal of the individual from the school until the situation is resolved,” said Gary Jones, DODDS in Europe safety and security officer.

“The program is tailored to the individual school by studying incidents of violence in the past, climate surveys and other methodology to identify and target likely threats,” Jones said, “and key components to the program are community participation and crisis management.”

Natasha Carlson, 15, a sophomore attending Kaiserslautern High School, said she feels DODDS schools are safer than most stateside schools. Her family spent four years at Mountain Home Air Force Base, Idaho, where she attended middle school before moving to Germany.

Carlson said stateside schools are too cliquey and students overseas are friendlier. Despite the idealistic conditions Carlson uses to describe Kaiserslautern, she still says there are certain groups that look down upon other students.

“In our school, the people who smoke and drink always make fun of the nerds ... kids shouldn’t be afraid to come forward ... the mocking needs to stop and other students need to stick up for each other,” she said.

Despite DODDS’ track record on violence and safety, Jones said that can’t discount the possibility that violence can occur. “Never think or say, ‘It can’t happen here.’”

About $17 million will be spent on security enhancements at DODDS facilities during the next five years. Jones said some of the money would be spent on installing fencing, lighting and other physical security enhancements.

Besides the physical changes, Jones said, parents still need to communicate with their children, teachers and school administrators.

“In most incidents of violence, there have been warning signs. We all have to get better at detecting and interpreting these signs,” he added.

Deborah Booth, assistant DODDS liaison officer for U.S. Air Forces in Europe, agreed with Jones, saying, “School climate ratings are significantly impacted by strong parental involvement and visibility in the schools.

“When a school tragedy strikes, the entire community has to recover ... with the military lifestyle, we need all the help we can get.”

Booth, who works at Ramstein Air Base, said she believes parents need to be involved in their children’s lives and spend more time talking to them. “A conversation while folding clothes or doing the dishes can be an eye-opener.”

Martha Powers-Nosal and her husband, Frank Nosal, know from personal experience the importance of parental involvement.

Their daughter, Kimberly, graduated last year from Ramstein High School after spending 13 years in the DODDS school system. As education technologists at the middle and elementary schools at Ramstein AB, her parents see the environment students deal with.

Powers-Nosal said it seems DODDS schools have a more controlled environment than schools in the states.

“I’ve been with DODDS for 25 years and had a child in DODDS for 13 years. I never once felt afraid for her or myself,” she said.

Her husband agreed, but said he believed many parents feel they aren’t wanted at the schools. “We need more programs to invite parents to the schools because they are always welcome.”

Both parents believe the Columbine school shooting and others occur because parents don’t pay enough attention to their children and the pleas for help.

“Instead of being critical toward them ... parents need to look at the situation from their (children’s) point of view ... listen to them, and talk to them,” Powers-Nosal said.

Dr. Susan Kelly, USAFE DODDS Liaison Officer, said, “looking beyond school facilities is another part of creating safer environments in schools.

“We need to consider student safety on school buses, and acknowledge unique aspects of the host nation environment as well as growing concern for force protection.”

With antiterrorism, force protection and crisis management programs, school officials hope to mobilize the resources needed to provide counseling support to students and staff if a tragic event was to occur, Jones said.

“The best safe schools involve the entire community,” he said. “We need to continue to challenge that partnership to be proactive and work aggressively on our intervention programs.”

Law closes gap for civilian offenders overseas

WASHINGTON — A new law on the books now provides U.S. federal law enforcement authorities jurisdiction over military civilians who commit certain types of crimes overseas.

The Military Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act of 2000 establishes federal jurisdiction over offenses committed overseas by U.S. civilians employed by or accompanying the armed forces as well as certain military service members. The act applies if the offense is punishable by confinement of one year or more had it been committed within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States.

The law applies to civilian employees, contractors and family members, and to service members who separate from active duty before being identified and prosecuted, according to Lt. Col. Douglas Anderson, with the Air Force judge advocate general’s international and operations law division.

Previously, civilians could not be tried in the United States for many different offenses if they committed the offense overseas. If a civilian allegedly committed a federal crime that had no extraterritorial effect and the host nation chose not to prosecute, the United States had no authority to pursue criminal charges, Anderson said.

However, in 1995, Congress directed the DOD and justice to review and make recommendations to determine appropriate measures to extend criminal jurisdiction over civilians outside the United States.

With the consent of the host nation and applicable international agreements, the act allows the United States to use federal authorities overseas to arrest and detain persons suspected of committing offenses and to telephonically conduct initial pretrial proceedings.

Provided a federal magistrate orders it and the host nation agrees, “the act now authorizes

U.S. authorities to remove the person to the United States to be tried in federal district court when the host nation chooses not to prosecute,” Anderson said.

“Through this legislation, Congress has addressed a significant concern we have long faced at our overseas military installations,” said Maj. Gen. William Moorman, Air Force judge advocate general.

“Commanders needed better tools to help maintain good order and discipline on their installations, including the need to ensure justice was applied as consistently as possible,” Moorman said. (Air Force Print News)

Force protection – don't leave home without it

By Maj. Janine Weber
39th Services Squadron commander

INCIRLIK AIR BASE, Turkey — If you've been overseas any length of time, no doubt enhanced security practices have become a part of your daily life.

If you are anything like me, you take security seriously, make a good faith effort to follow security policies and directives, and you feel you have become pretty savvy about all those personal protective measures you learned in your Antiterrorism and Force Protection training.

Even though I've been feeling pretty comfortable with my personal security practices,
I was chagrined to catch myself in a few faux
pas while on vacation in Europe and Turkey recently.

I caught the Patriot Express to Rhein Main,
and then switched over to the commercial terminal at Frankfurt to continue my travels.
When checking in for my commercial flight, I realized I left conspicuous blue Air Mobility Command luggage tags on my suitcases and had just dragged them through what seemed to be 10 miles of the commercial terminal in full view of hundreds, maybe thousands of people, any one of whom could have been looking for a target of opportunity.

When I unpacked at my final destination, and pulled my purse out of the suitcase what did I see but a prominently displayed stick-on label proclaiming my name, rank, unit and duty phone number - a requirement on base, but a conspicuous marker otherwise.

Fortunately, I had packed my purse and used a fanny pack while traveling, so I was able to remove the sticker before carrying the purse in public. A good catch, but I almost missed it.

Again, I found myself behind the game
while waiting in line for the ferry on the Isle of Capri. I struck up a conversation with the nice American family ahead of me. We were innocently chatting about the great sites we had seen when suddenly the husband said,
"We're visiting from Pennsylvania, how about you?"

I nearly blurted out to my new-found friends
that I was in the Air Force stationed in Turkey and that I was visiting Italy on leave. At the last second, I swallowed those words and managed to come up with "I'm from Virginia" (my home state).

As a second lieutenant stationed abroad in the mid 80s, I had a prepared cover story at the tip of my tongue whenever I traveled to tell those friendly and curious co-travelers who had no need to know my personal history. I always said I was a Canadian student traveling in Europe.

I have too much gray hair to use that one anymore, but the near mistake in Capri reminded me to think through what I would say
the next time strangers asked me personal questions.

Yes, I made a few mistakes on my trip, but I do think I was successful at blending in and being inconspicuous.

Unfortunately, others weren't doing so well in this area. Everywhere I went from Germany to Italy to Kiz Kalesi, I could pick out the Americans immediately.

They were the ones most likely wearing shorts or jeans with un-tucked shirts and baseball caps. They wore athletic clothing as street wear and walked about sipping open bottles of beer.

Europeans and Turks just don't seem to do that. Americans were also the ones most likely talking just a bit louder than the locals and relaxing by letting off some verbal steam about what's going on at work.

If there's a moral to this story, I guess it's that the summer travel season is upon us, and leaving the cocoon of a home base exposes us to higher security risks. Practicing good security during your travels can save your life as well as others. Keep operations security in mind, leave your nametag and job behind and enjoy the summer. (USAFE News Service)

Re-enlistment bonus

Question: First of all, let me say my first sergeant and commander
have been working on this situation for me; unfortunately, it's starting to drag out. Here's the situation:

I re-enlisted June 19. According to Air Force Instruction 36-2606 (paragraph 2.15.1), I'm supposed to get the initial installment of my re-enlistment bonus on the day I re-enlist; however, Spangdahlem Air Base's military personnel flight says it normally takes a minimum of 30 days to process the SRB information. In addition, the chief master sergeant there said no bonuses are being paid until the Air Force's new personnel system
(MILMOD) is operational.

I called the Air Force Personnel Center last week and was told the Spangdahlem AB MPF can e-mail
my re-enlistment information to Defense Finance and Accounting Service to have the initial payment processed; however, when I called the Spangdahlem AB MPF to relay
the information, I was told (again)
they couldn't do anything until MILMOD is operational.

It has been more than three weeks since I re-enlisted and I'm frustrated with this whole situation.

I don't understand why AFPC is telling me I can get my bonus and the Spangdahlem AB MPF is telling me I can't. Especially if there is an AF1 that states I should have already received it.

I know MILMOD isn't working the way it's supposed to, but after speaking with AFPC I also know there are other ways to get this accomplished.

I would appreciate it if you would work this at your level.

Answer: I understand you are frustrated with this process and apologize for any inconvenience you experienced. This has been an Air Force-wide problem, linked to the implementation of the new MILMOD system; however, the MPF is committed to solving those issues and helping Team Eifel
customers as quickly as possible.

Air Force Instruction 36-2606 states you should receive an initial installment of your re-enlistment
bonus on the day you re-enlist;
however, because of system
interface issues between the personnel system and the finance system, it can take between two weeks and 30 days to actually see this bonus in your account.
Additionally, the process for paying Selective Re-enlistment Bonuses is currently having system

interface problems Air Force-wide between MILMOD and DFAS. It wasn't until July 12 that AFPC gave us permission to forward authorizations to DFAS to pay the SRB. This is why you were told by the MPF they couldn't send your authorization for your SRB to finance.

As of July 13, all 53
authorizations for SRBs for Team Eifel members have been released
to DFAS for payment.

Tennis court conditions

Question: In the spring of 2000,
I went to the Spangdahlem Air
Base housing tennis courts to play.
The courts were trashed. The first net was broken and the courts were filled with twigs and leaves from the winter, leaving the court rather dangerous to play on.

I talked to members of the gym
staff about the problem. They said they have a hard time keeping the courts in order since children go in there and play on the nets. I suggested they fix the nets and then lock the door. A sign could be put on the door indicating keys could be checked out at the base gym.

It is now a year later. I went to the courts to play and found that the courts still need to be cleaned
and repaired

Answer: Services squadron
staff members are working hard to clean up and repair the tennis court.
They already trimmed back the trees overhanging the courts and are waiting for new tennis poles to arrive. They also purchased new nets and will install them once the new poles are in place. They hope to have the new equipment
delivered within a few weeks.

They also changed the way they care for the courts. Patrons will now reserve court time through the fitness center. The tennis courts have been locked to safeguard against vandalism and abuse that left the courts in their current condition. Further, the services squadron staff has added routine
checks and cleaning of the courts to its checklists to ensure they remain in top condition. A new sign, clearly detailing court
reservation and use procedures,
contact phone numbers and facility hours will soon be installed for patrons information.

Stroll through royal English gardens at Leed's

By Staff Sgt. Cindy York
52nd Fighter Wing Public Affairs Office

Living in Europe offers a great opportunity to travel and see things most of our families and friends back home only dream about. Whether you like big cities, small communities, beaches, mountains or anything in between, you can usually find it within a short distance.

A couple of months ago, I decided to go to London for a long weekend. It was my first time to England and I was excited about going to see all the sites in the city – Big Ben, Harrod's, Kensington Palace, Harrod's, Buckingham Palace and did I mention, Harrod's? There's so much to do in London, I never considered going outside the city for sightseeing – until I got there.

I saw a pamphlet on the most gorgeous castle I'd ever seen, Leed's Castle, in Maidstone, Kent. The pictures were so beautiful I had to go. I wasn't disappointed.

Leed's Castle was built nearly 900 years ago and has been a royal residence for six of England's medieval queens, a palace of Henry VIII and a retreat for many powerful and influential people. Today, you can tour the castle and its gardens, along with taking part in various entertainment and events throughout the year.

Dubbed "The loveliest castle in the world", it's located on an island, surrounded by a golf course and an aviary, along with some of the most beautiful landscaping I've ever seen.

Getting to the castle from London is very easy. You can buy your ticket for the train rides to and from Bearsted station, the short bus ride to and from the train station to the castle and entrance into the castle at any train station in London.

If you're planning a trip to England and would like more information on Leed's Castle, feel free to call me at 452-5244, or check out their website at www.leeds-castle.co.uk.

Enjoy the scenic pathway from the castle's visitor's parking area, which is about two-thirds of a mile long. Buses to the castle are available for those who prefer not to walk.
